

Do Trade Shows Really Make Nearby Hotels More Expensive to Book?

35 UK B2B trade-show date groups · 9 venues

A matched comparison of public hotel quotes, with a same-day repeat and distance checks.

29 September 2026

What the average hides

The typical premium was 8.7% initially and 7.9% on repeat. The largest problems were concentrated in particular show dates, not spread evenly across the sample.

Read the findings, then use the worksheet to compare your own current quotes. Captured offers are not payments, guarantees or booking-time predictions.

A hotel beside the exhibition hall looks convenient, until its room quote becomes a surprisingly large part of your stand budget.

But treating every trade show as an expensive hotel week can be just as misleading as ignoring accommodation altogether.

We analysed 736 matched hotel comparisons across 35 UK B2B trade-show date groups at 9 venues.

These are quoted prices captured on 29 September 2026, not room bills; each hotel was compared with its own control nights.

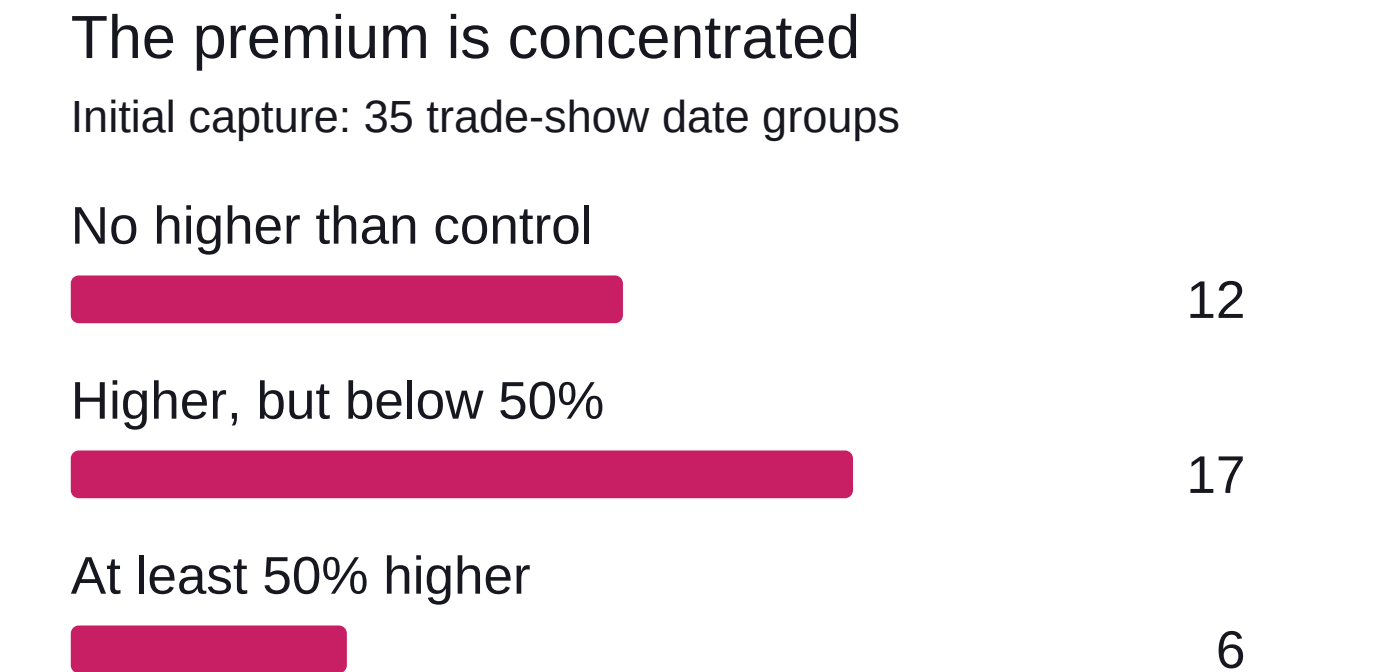

Did most shows carry a premium, and how much difference did staying further from the hall make? Here's what we found.

Most show nights barely moved nearby hotel prices

The typical trade-show premium was small enough to challenge the assumption that exhibition dates automatically mean a punishing hotel bill.

The important distinction was between the ordinary show night and the handful where accommodation became a much bigger budget item.

The median group premium was 8.7% initially and 7.9% on repeat, with this initial spread:

Counts of date-group medians, not individual hotels. Repeat capture gave the same counts. Each hotel compared with its own control quotes. Source: Google Hotels, google.com/travel/hotels; Stand Central analysis. Captured 29 September 2026.

At 12 of 35 date groups, the median show-night quote was no higher than the same hotels' matched controls.

Only 6 groups reached at least 50% above their controls, and the repeat retained the same high-premium groups. The sharpest increases were concentrated, rather than a standard feature of every show in the sample.

For your exhibition budget, price the actual nights instead of automatically adding a large trade-show surcharge. Keep accommodation alongside your exhibition stand and travel costs, so a comfortable average does not hide an expensive date.

The worst show nights roughly doubled nearby hotel quotes

At the expensive end, the extra nightly cost was substantial enough to deserve its own line in an exhibitor budget.

The 6 groups above the 50% threshold were concentrated at just 2 venues, rather than spread across the country.

Here are those show nights ranked by their initial median ratio, with the repeat beside each result:

LAMMA 2027 led at 2.10x, with a median extra £66.25 per hotel night. LAMMA was 1.89x on the same-day repeat.

Occupational Therapy Show followed at 1.86x, or £49.50 extra, and Brand Licensing Europe at 1.80x, or £52.25. Of the 6 high-premium groups, 4 were at the NEC and 2 at Excel London.

For a team staying several nights, check the full accommodation total before committing the rest of the exhibition budget. Record the room cost in your trade-show preparation plan while comparing locations. These same-day quotes cannot identify the cheapest booking week.

Further-out hotels had smaller premiums at high-surge shows

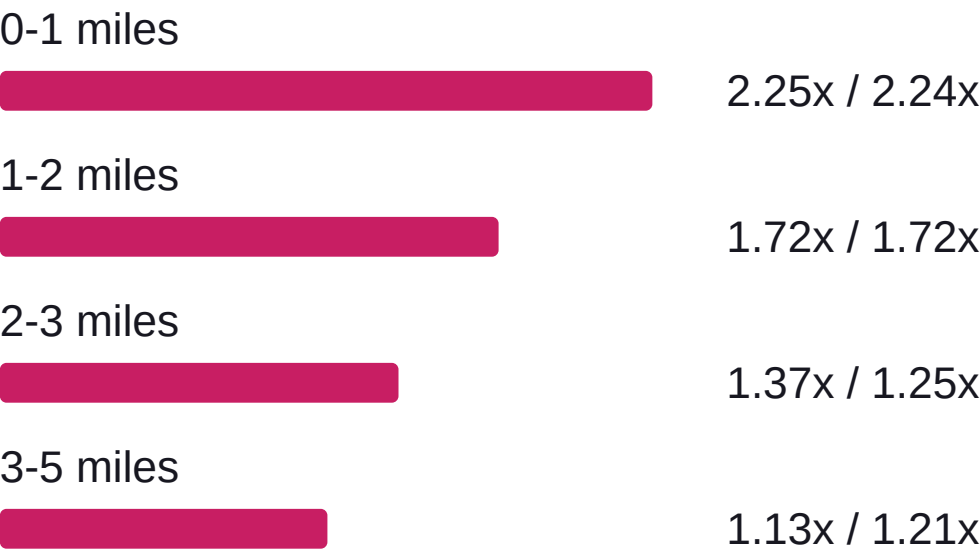

The sharpest premiums were not evenly spread around the 6 expensive show groups: the pattern differed sharply by distance from the venue.

We grouped the hotel comparisons by their displayed distance from the exhibition hall to see where the largest uplifts appeared.

The initial pattern was clear, and the repeat also showed smaller premiums further from the venue:

Further out, a smaller premium

Initial / repeat median hotel/control ratio

Pooled hotel comparisons at the 6 high-premium groups. Bar lengths are initial ratios; adjacent values show initial / repeat. Initial/repeat n by band: 0-1: 40/39; 1-2: 16/18; 2-3: 20/19; 3-5: 25/26. Source: Google Hotels, google.com/travel/hotels; Stand Central analysis. Captured 29 September 2026.

Within 1 mile, the initial median was 2.25x the control quote, compared with 1.13x at 3-5 miles. On repeat, those figures were 2.24x and 1.21x respectively.

The outer band still carried a premium, but it was much smaller than the uplift beside the hall. That makes 3-5 miles a useful comparison area when nearby quotes look expensive, rather than a reason to abandon the search.

These Google Hotels distances are not verified walking routes. Compare the room saving with transport, parking and the arrival time your team needs. If you carry portable exhibition walls, include loading and the practical morning journey in that decision.

Nearby hotel counts showed no clear premium relationship

A venue with fewer nearby hotels might seem the obvious place to expect a price surge, but that shortcut did not hold.

Across the sample, mapped hotel counts showed no clear relationship with premiums, including when we compared venues rather than individual dates.

These venue examples show why counting the hotel pins was less useful than checking the actual quotes:

Hotel stock did not settle it

Illustrations from the 9-venue analysis. Bars count mapped hotel features within three straight-line miles; values also show date groups with premiums of at least 50%. Source: Google Hotels, google.com/travel/hotels; Stand Central analysis. Mapped hotel counts: OpenStreetMap, openstreetmap.org. Captured 29 September 2026.

The NEC had 4 high-premium groups among 9, alongside 22 mapped hotels within three miles. Harrogate and Farnborough had none, despite smaller mapped counts of 18 and 16 respectively.

A sparse-looking hotel map was therefore not a reliable guide to which show dates had the highest premiums. The OpenStreetMap comparison is a non-finding, not a predictor of future prices.

Use the map to build a shortlist, then use dated quotes to compare the options that suit your team. Add those options to your exhibition planning checklist, with the full stay total beside the journey requirements.

Final thoughts

The useful lesson is not that trade-show hotels are always expensive. It is that your dates matter more than a blanket assumption about exhibition pricing.

Start with the nights your team actually needs and compare nearby hotels with options further from the hall. Put the full stay total beside transport, parking and the time needed to reach the stand each morning.

Keep the shortlist practical: match occupancy and booking conditions, then decide what convenience is worth to your team. Spend the effort on comparing real options for your show, rather than budgeting for a price surge that most nights in this study did not show.

Largest show-night premiums

LAMMA 2027 (NEC Birmingham): 2.10x initial / 1.89x repeat; median extra £66.25 initially / £69.75 repeat; Occupational Therapy Show 2026 (NEC Birmingham): 1.86x initial / 1.79x repeat; median extra £49.50 initially / £46.75 repeat; Brand Licensing Europe 2026 (Excel London): 1.80x initial / 1.79x repeat; median extra £52.25 initially / £46.50 repeat; Advanced Engineering / Euro Bus Expo overlapping-show unit (NEC Birmingham): 1.63x initial / 1.81x repeat; median extra £39.00 initially / £38.00 repeat; The Schools & Academies Show (NEC Birmingham): 1.54x initial / 1.54x repeat; median extra £27.50 initially / £27.50 repeat; DTX / Employee Benefits Live overlapping-show unit (Excel London): 1.54x initial / 1.54x repeat; median extra £47.00 initially / £48.50 repeat.

Ratios and pound differences are separate medians across matched hotels. Different listing membership can shift the ratio median even when the median cash difference rises, as at LAMMA; the repeat is not a fixed hotel basket.

Question and population

The study asks how captured hotel quotes around UK B2B trade shows compare with matched control nights, whether distance helps and whether mapped local hotel stock relates to premiums. The population is 35 usable B2B date groups at 9 venues.

Scope and exclusions

Only business-to-business trade shows are included. Consumer exhibitions, sport, concerts, racing and other non-trade events were excluded. Each show date was checked against the organiser website listed in the source register. Date groups that did not reach five matched hotels were excluded rather than shown without data. The study used a timestamped analysis protocol fixed before the trade-show quotes were collected; organiser dates were rechecked before publication.

Unit and matching

A date group is a venue event or overlapping-show group, with the first open day as the quoted show night. The retained dates run from 2026-10-06 to 2027-04-27. A group needs at least five matched hotels; each hotel needs at least two same-weekday calendar-screened control quotes. Exact hotel names are matched, rentals and hostels excluded, and distance restricted to at most ten miles. Overlapping groups refer to the earliest opening component, not all named shows opening that night.

There are 736 initial and 740 repeat hotel/group comparisons. The public quote register has 5870 unique capture-specific observations, each with a source URL, publisher, access time, original displayed amount, edition, minimal verbatim excerpt and locator. A hotel may appear in several date groups. The public source register contains 330 sources.

Formula and denominators

For each hotel, divide its show-night quote by the median of its matched control quotes. Take the median hotel ratio within each group, then the equal-weight median across groups. The typical premium is this ratio minus one, multiplied by 100. It is not the median of every pooled hotel comparison. Ratios of 1.00 indicate no premium; a group at 1.50 is at least 50% higher. Cash differences are calculated within hotels before aggregation, not by subtracting unrelated marginal medians.

Distance and supply

Distance bands use continuous Google-listed distances. They are not verified walking routes. High-premium bands pool hotels from groups with medians of at least 1.50; different bands contain different hotels and their mix is not controlled. Mapped supply counts use OpenStreetMap tourism=hotel features within fixed straight-line radii, deduplicated by OSM type and ID. They are not verified distinct establishments, hotel rooms or available inventory. OpenStreetMap data is © OpenStreetMap contributors, available under ODbL.

The three-mile supply association was Spearman rho 0.155, permutation p 0.365, n=35 date groups initially. Repeat values were rho 0.178, p 0.3018. At venue level, initial rho was 0.2, p 0.6187, n=9; repeat rho was 0.226, p 0.5606. Tests use 10,000 two-sided permutations, seed 7, without multiple-comparison adjustment. Shared hotels and venues mean observations are not independent.

What the repeat can and cannot show

Both captures occurred on the same day. The repeat tests measurement stability, including changes in listings, not how prices evolve towards arrival. No cheapest booking week, benefit from waiting or universal early-booking saving was tested. The publication shows both captures where the headline changed. Event attendance relative to room stock was not tested adequately, and no event-size conclusion is made.

Quote interpretation

These are displayed GBP offers at the default two-adult occupancy, not payments or verified available rooms. The same hotel can show different room types, rate conditions or providers between dates. Do not assume equivalent refundability or tax treatment beyond the displayed offer. Calendar screening cannot eliminate private or citywide demand. A missing displayed quote does not establish a sell-out. Sources are a venue-led snapshot, not a representative census or causal experiment.

Reproduction and refresh

The CSV downloads contain the date groups, matched pairs, captured quote evidence and sources. Join pair observation IDs to observation_id in the quotes CSV, and source IDs to the sources CSV. Recompute within-hotel control medians before group medians; keep initial and repeat separate. Raw page captures are not published; every quote keeps its source URL, excerpt and locator. Prices change, so repeat the capture before relying on current prices. Publishing organisation: Stand Central, an exhibition-display retailer, not a hotel provider.
