

THE GREEN RULES STUDY

Do Green Exhibition Pledges Change What Exhibitors Must Actually Buy?

Pledges sit on corporate pages. We read what UK trade shows actually require of exhibitors, and what the mainstream display market offers them.

3 of 68	UK trade shows bind exhibitors to a green materials rule
10 of 10	clean-up rules are binding, against 6 of 28 green materials rules
3 of 56	mainstream suppliers name a product standard; 38 make an eco claim
+11.7% to +74.1%	eco banner price in 3 same-size comparisons

We read the published exhibitor material of 68 UK B2B trade shows and the websites of 56 mainstream UK display suppliers, coded 38 exhibitor rules, and compared eco and standard banner prices listed by the same supplier. Excel London's own pledges are set beside the shows we read there.

133 public records from 112 cited source captures. Commissioned by Stand Central, which is excluded from every frame.

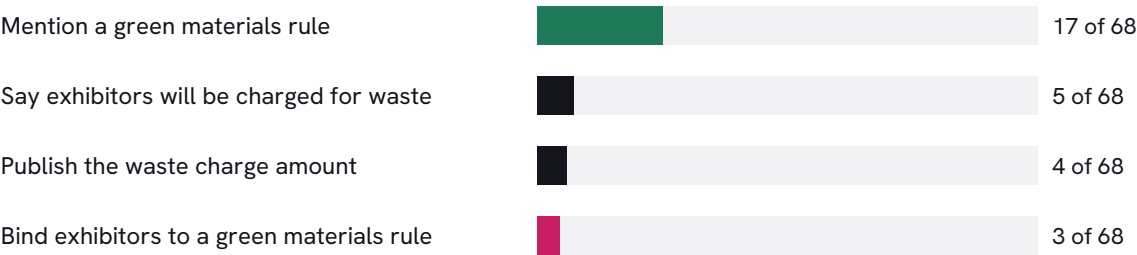

FINDING 1

Binding green rules are rare in published exhibitor material

Only 3 of 68 UK trade shows (4.4%) bind exhibitors to a green materials rule in the published exhibitor material we could read: Global Offshore Wind, Infosecurity Europe and London Tech Week. 17 of the 68 (25.0%) mention a green materials rule at all, mostly as encouragement.

Few UK trade shows bind exhibitors to green rules

Excel London holds ISO 20121, a 2045 net zero target and the Net Zero Carbon Events pledge. Of the 19 shows we read there, 1 (Infosecurity Europe) binds exhibitors to a green materials rule, and that rule bans PVC banners only when they are rigged (hung) above the stand.

A pledge by a venue or organiser did not usually translate into a binding materials rule in the exhibitor material we read. Where one did, it was narrow: space-only stands at London Tech Week, rigged banners at Infosecurity Europe, plastics at Global Offshore Wind.

For an exhibitor, the practical reading is that the manual for your own show, not the venue's pledge, sets what you must do. Check the rigging, space-only and plastics sections before you order.

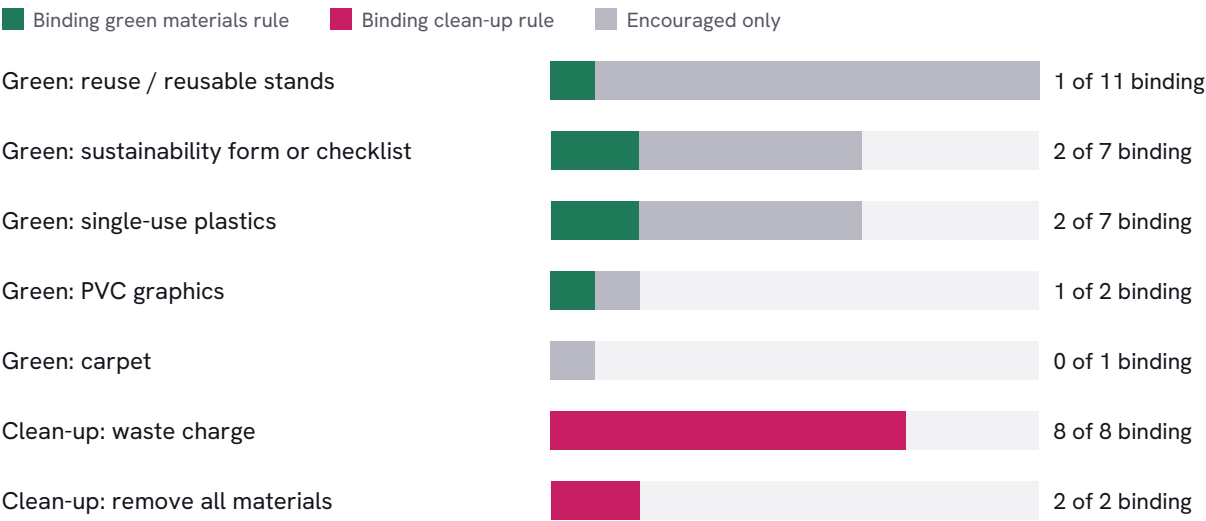

FINDING 2

Clean-up rules are binding; green materials rules mostly ask

All 10 clean-up rules we coded are binding, against 6 of 28 green materials rules (21.4%). 5 of 68 shows warn exhibitors they will be charged for waste left behind, and 4 publish an amount.

Clean-up rules bind; green materials rules mostly ask

The published amount is £500 + VAT at Learning Technologies, London Vet Show and The Jewellery Show. FIT Show sets a waste charge that starts at £300 + VAT, plus a £500 + VAT fine. None of the 28 green materials rules carries a published charge.

The rules that carry money are about leaving nothing behind. Where an amount is published it is set in pounds, while green materials rules rely on requests, checklists and encouragement.

Budget for clean-up as a real cost. Where a manual says waste removal is charged but gives no amount, ask the organiser before build-up.

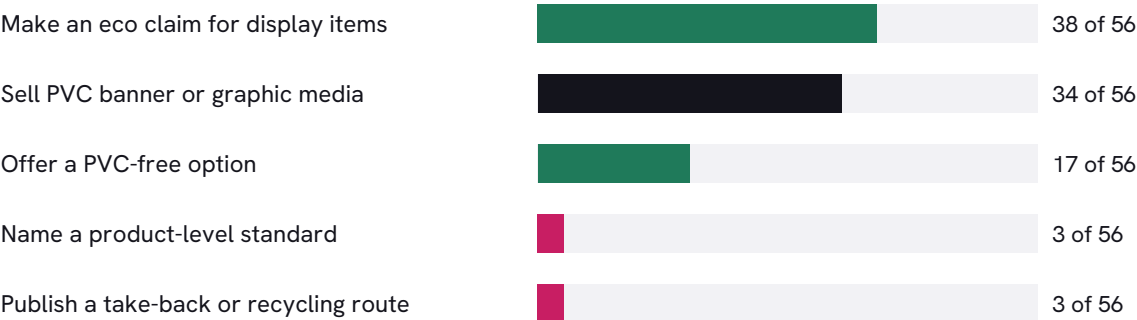

FINDING 3

Most suppliers make eco claims; few name a standard

38 of 56 mainstream UK display suppliers (67.9%) make an eco claim for display items, but only 3 (5.4%) name a product-level standard and only 3 (5.4%) publish a take-back or recycling route for used displays.

Eco claims are common; named standards are not

Source: Marler Haley | <https://marlerhaley.co.uk/collections/eco-friendly-displays>
Source: Nimlok | <https://www.nimlok.co.uk/sustainability/>

The named standards are the Global Recycled Standard (Ink on Fabric) and FSC board or paper (Xpo Displays and Printdesigns). The take-back routes are at GH Display, Marler Haley and Nimlok, each with its own scope. 12 suppliers' claims are vague only. 34 of the 56 (60.7%) sell PVC banner or graphic media and 17 (30.4%) offer a PVC-free option.

Eco wording is widespread, but the evidence behind it varies. A handful of suppliers name a recognised standard or publish a take-back route, and each take-back route has its own scope.

Ask a supplier which standard applies to the specific product, and get the take-back terms in writing. The supplier table lists every claim we found, with its source.

Same-size eco banners cost 11.7% to 74.1% more

In the 3 comparisons where one supplier listed an eco and a standard banner at the same size, the eco banner cost 11.7% to 74.1% more: BannerBuzz UK (910mm x 610mm): £8.99 standard vs £15.65 eco, +74.1%; Bannerworld (per square metre (lowest band)): £11.34 standard vs £18.70 eco, +64.9%; Tradeprint (1.5m x 0.5m, quantity 1, first delivery column): £18.06 standard vs £20.17 eco, +11.7%.

Same-size eco banners cost more at 3 suppliers

Eco price above the same supplier's standard banner at the same size | GBP as listed

Captured 2026-09-29. BannerBuzz UK £8.99 vs £15.65; Bannerworld £11.34 vs £18.70; Tradeprint £18.06 vs £20.17.

*Tradeprint's default finishing differs (eyelets, hemming), so this is a same-size comparison, not a like-for-like material premium. Causes of the differences were not measured.

Source: BannerBuzz UK | <https://www.bannerbuzz.co.uk/banners>

Source: Bannerworld | <https://www.bannerworld.co.uk/product/pvc-free-eco-banner/>

Source: Tradeprint | <https://www.tradeprint.co.uk/banners/pvc-free-banners>

Tradeprint's default finishing differs between the two banners, so the 11.7% gap is a same-size price comparison, not a like-for-like material premium. We did not measure why prices differ. In 5 other comparisons, eco starting prices were 20.0% to 255.4% above standard starting prices, but the sizes were not matched, so these are not premium estimates.

In each same-size comparison we found, the eco banner was listed at a higher price than the same supplier's standard banner. The differences were not explained by the pages, and we did not test why they differ.

Compare eco and standard options at the same size, finishing and VAT basis. Starting prices at different sizes cannot tell you the premium.

Methodology and scope

Question and status

Do the green commitments made around UK trade shows turn into rules that change what an exhibitor has to buy or do, and what does the mainstream display market offer an exhibitor who wants to comply? This is capture-time documentary research of published exhibitor material and supplier pages. It is not an audit of any show, venue or product, and it does not measure environmental outcomes or exhibitor behaviour.

Pages were captured on 2026-09-29 (UTC). The timestamped protocol was written at 2026-09-29T11:19:34Z, before collection, and every later change to the method was logged with its date and time before the collection or analysis it governs. It is a timestamped protocol, not a preregistration.

Who is in the sample

Trade shows: 68 UK B2B trade shows with readable published exhibitor material (manual, rules or exhibitor sustainability pages) for the current or next edition. Shows came from the flagship UK shows of 13 major organisers and the trade-show frames of earlier Stand Central studies. Consumer, agricultural and conference-only events are out of scope.

Suppliers: 56 mainstream UK sellers of portable display items with readable pages. They were chosen for earlier Stand Central price studies before any eco claim was read, so they are the denominator for every supplier share. Stand Central is excluded from every frame by a protocol rule written before collection.

Venue context: Excel London, whose own published pledges are set beside the shows we read there. An entity that yielded no usable pages is excluded from the study rather than reported.

Publication subset

The canonical study also recorded pledges by other venues and organisers and a descriptive set of suppliers found through eco-specific searches. This package publishes the subset that serves a B2B exhibitor reader: every coded exhibitor rule (38), every mainstream-supplier record, every price row (16 rows from 8 comparisons, 3 of whose suppliers were found through eco searches), and Excel London's pledge rows. The subset was logged in the publication folder before the package was built; the canonical data are unchanged. Public numbers are generated from the canonical analysis by script.

Coding

Every coded rule, claim and price carries its source URL, publisher, UTC capture time and a verbatim excerpt; a build fails if any excerpt is not found in its capture. Rules are coded as green materials rules (reuse, sustainability forms, single-use plastics, PVC, carpet) or clean-up rules (waste charges, removing all materials). Binding means mandatory wording ("must", "not permitted", "will be charged") or a sanction; advisory wording ("encourage", "consider", "where possible") is coded encouraged. Fire, structural and electrical rules belong to a separate study and are not coded here.

Supplier grades: names a product-level standard (for example Global Recycled Standard or FSC attached to a display item) > specific material or scheme claim > generic eco wording only > no eco claim found on the pages read. Company-level certificates do not make a display claim certified. Automated candidates were hand-checked, and every override reason is published in the supplier table. "Not found on pages read" describes the pages we read, which are listed in full; it is not proof that no such offer exists.

PVC is measured as whether a supplier sells PVC banner or graphic media on the pages read, excluding PVC-free wording and technical PVC such as Foamex, cable or tablecloths. It is not a measure of the default media.

Measures behind the four findings

- Shows: shows whose readable material contains a binding green materials rule, divided by 68. The 3 are Global Offshore Wind, Infosecurity Europe and London Tech Week.
- Rules: binding rules divided by all coded rules in each group: clean-up 10 of 10, green materials 6 of 28. Charges are quoted exactly as published, excluding VAT; FIT Show's £300 + VAT is a minimum waste charge, with a separate £500 + VAT fine.
- Suppliers: counts of the 56 mainstream suppliers by eco claim grade, PVC media, PVC-free option and published take-back route. A take-back route is a supplier statement that it will accept or collect used display graphics or hardware; general recyclability does not count.
- Prices: difference = (eco price - standard price) / standard price, for the same supplier and the same stated size or unit on the same page basis. 3 same-size comparisons qualify. Tradeprint's default finishing differs, so no comparison is presented as a pure material premium. 5 further comparisons use starting prices at unconfirmed sizes; they are published as unmatched starting prices and never as a premium estimate.

Limitations

- A purposive census of named frames, not a random sample: statements stay inside the frame and are not estimates for all UK events or suppliers.
- Some exhibitor manuals sit behind exhibitor logins, which we did not use. Findings describe published material we could read; a gated manual may hold further rules.
- Capture-time evidence: rules, claims and prices can change. Prices are as listed, with the VAT basis recorded as stated on the page.
- The study does not measure environmental impact, enforcement, compliance, exhibitor behaviour or product quality, and it makes no causal claim about pledges, rules or prices.
- Supplier pages were read to a fixed crawl depth (home page and eco or product pages, up to 30 pages); an offer outside those pages is not counted.

Commercial-interest disclosure

Commissioned by Stand Central, a retailer of exhibition displays that sells an eco-friendly display range. Stand Central is excluded from every frame, observation and comparison. Supplier and show names are reported as documented facts, not endorsements or rankings.

Reproduction and evidence

The observation CSV holds 133 public records; the source register lists the 112 captures cited by this package with minimal quotations, locators, publishers, exact URLs, capture times and capture hashes. Raw page captures and internal paths are private. Claim IDs F1 to F4 link each finding to its observation IDs and formula.

How each finding is calculated

Observation IDs match the first column of the observations CSV.

Binding green rules are rare in published exhibitor material

Only 3 of 68 UK trade shows (4.4%) bind exhibitors to a green materials rule in the published exhibitor material we could read: Global Offshore Wind, Infosecurity Europe and London Tech Week. 17 of the 68 (25.0%) mention a green materials rule at all, mostly as encouragement.

Calculation: Shows with at least one binding green-materials rule, divided by all shows captured; the same for any green-materials rule, binding or encouraged. Excel London venue rules are reported separately.

Clean-up rules are binding; green materials rules mostly ask

All 10 clean-up rules we coded are binding, against 6 of 28 green materials rules (21.4%). 5 of 68 shows warn exhibitors they will be charged for waste left behind, and 4 publish an amount.

Calculation: Binding clean-up rules divided by all clean-up rules, and binding green-materials rules divided by all green-materials rules. Priced rules and shows with a published waste charge are counted from the rules table.

Most suppliers make eco claims; few name a standard

38 of 56 mainstream UK display suppliers (67.9%) make an eco claim for display items, but only 3 (5.4%) name a product-level standard and only 3 (5.4%) publish a take-back or recycling route for used displays.

Calculation: Counts of the 56 mainstream suppliers with usable pages: any eco claim, a named product standard, a published take-back route, PVC media sold and a PVC-free option offered.
